The documentary is about a homeless minister who stands up to a New Jersey town that is evicting him, along with 80 other people living in the woods in Lakewood, NJ. For the last seven years the encampment, known as Tent City, has become a home for people who lost their jobs during the economic downfall the country has experienced. The film brings up questions about the human rights of the poor while exploring new ideas for housing the homeless. With eviction on their doorstep, the homeless set out to create their own self-sustained shelter called Destiny's Bridge, that provides community, ownership and rehabilitation.

Filmmaker, Jack Ballo, is not only bringing the film out to communities to bring awareness to homeless issues, the film screenings are raising funds for its Outreach and Distribution Program so that the documentary can be distributed to a national audience. The film premiered in August of 2013 to a sold out crowd at the Two River Theater in Red Bank and has since been screened throughout New Jersey and New York. The documentary is now in the film festival circuit and plans are being made to bring the film out on a national film tour throughout the country.
